Marketing Senior Specialist, Call of Duty, Activision Blizzard

Dear Hiring Manager,

I am applying for the Marketing Senior Specialist role on Call of Duty. I have spent 15 years in esports and live events, and the part of your advert that matches my work most closely is coordinating many teams so that a large, live programme runs on time and everyone has the same information.

As Head of Esports Operations at BLAST I led a six-person department and worked with the product and commercial teams to cost and pitch new tournament work, and I set the technical requirements for commercial partnerships. Across six years at BLAST that meant 60+ flagship events and 300+ qualifiers in 13 countries, with 2,000+ freelancers and €12m+ in budgets. I rebuilt how the department worked, with clearer ownership and proper documentation, and built our own tools for event tracking, bookings and budgets so that people could see what was happening without chasing for it.

I should be upfront that my background is in operations and production rather than franchise or product marketing, and I have not run campaign performance analysis. What I would bring is steady cross-team coordination, stakeholder management and a real feel for how the gaming and esports audience experiences a live event, from the studio and the venue to the people running it.

I would welcome the chance to talk about how that could support the Call of Duty team in EMEA. Thank you for your time.

Yours faithfully,

Tim Everard
