Director of Soccer Aid (interim), UNICEF UK

Dear Hiring Manager,

I am applying for the Director of Soccer Aid (Interim) role. Soccer Aid is a large live event that has to work for the people in the stadium, the broadcaster and the charity at once. That is the kind of delivery I have spent my career on, and I would like to bring it to UNICEF UK.

Until October I was Head of Esports Operations at BLAST, leading a six-person department. In six years there we delivered 60+ flagship events and 300+ qualifiers in 13 countries, booking 2,000+ freelancers against €12m+ in budgets. I rebuilt how the department worked, wrote the business case for its own operating budget, and costed and pitched new work with the product and commercial teams. I also set technical requirements for commercial partnerships.

My background is in broadcast. I have worked as a technical director and producer on live shows for clients including the BBC, Sky Sports and ITV, and I designed a TV studio from scratch at Jam Television. I know what it takes to get a live production on air, and how to work alongside a broadcaster and a production company.

I should be clear that I have not worked in charity fundraising, and I would be learning that side of the role. What I can offer is steady leadership of a team, careful control of budgets and partners, and a focus on a smooth event day. I would welcome the chance to talk it through.

Yours faithfully,

Tim Everard
